Food Bank asks for community feedback

PITTSBURGH, PA (November 2, 2021) When the pandemic hit, many people in our community crossed paths with Greater Pittsburgh Community Food Bank (The food bank). Through food resources, volunteering and donations, our community has played a critical role in feeding our neighbors and implementing innovative programs to knock down a variety of hurdles in access food resources. As we continue our mission, the food bank is looking for feedback through a new survey.

The goal of this survey is to get an authentic look at ways we can make our programs more effective to meet the needs in our 11-county service area.

"We want to hear from anyone who supports the Food Bank's mission of feeding people in need and mobilizing the community to eliminate hunger. With your input, we can continue to strengthen our efforts to meet the needs of communities across southwestern PA," said Stakeholder Engagement Initiative Project Manager Erin Spangler.

This survey is part 2 of a 3-part effort to engage our community. The survey will be open through November 12th. To participate, please visit pittsburghfoodbank.org/feedback
